No more bitcoin for one Springfield business

Owner removes bitcoin ATM after witnessing multiple scams

NEWS | David Blanchette

A Springfield man has removed a once-prominent feature of his business after he witnessed an alarming trend.

“One hundred percent of the time that we saw somebody at the machine they were being scammed,” said Matthieu Fortin. “So I was like, this machine has to go. I’m not going to be a part of that.”

In early June, Fortin decided to remove the bitcoin ATM that he had installed just a few months before at Upper Limits Midwest, Inc., a vape shop near the Second Street and South Grand Avenue intersection. Fortin was being paid $300 a month by machine owner CoinFlip to have the bitcoin ATM available in his vape shop, but he no longer wanted to make it easy for scammers to prey on unsuspecting victims.

Fortin said the first person who came in to use the bitcoin ATM at his business was an elderly woman who was on the phone. The woman was trying to put thousands of dollars into the machine but was having difficulty because she didn’t understand the process. Several weeks later another elderly woman came in while talking on the phone and had deposited $5,000 of the $10,000 she had brought with her before one of Fortin’s employees stopped the woman and told her she was being scammed.

“As soon as you put the money into the bitcoin ATM it’s gone, you can’t get it back,” Fortin said. “Scammers find these vulnerable people that aren’t up on the latest technologies and they scare them on the phone, they tell them they are from the bank or the FBI and they are being watched, and they need to drop the money into this bitcoin machine.”

The woman who was scammed for $5,000 initially agreed to be interviewed for this story but later changed her mind. But Fortin gave her scammer a piece of his mind.

“I took her phone and told the scammer, ‘It’s up, man,’ and said some not very nice words to him and told him to never call the lady back,” Fortin said. “But as soon as we hung up, he called again. I was so enraged by that.”

Upper Limits Midwest. She witnessed scam victims trying to use the bitcoin ATM machine and was able to stop some of them in time. Veselack was also there on the day that the machine was removed from the business.

“When the armored car people came to take cash out of the machine I said, ‘All of that money was scammed from someone who looks just like your grandma,’” Veselack said.

Another Springfield vape shop, which requested that we not use its name in this story, still has a bitcoin ATM but has taped a prominent fraud warning sign below the transaction screen to alert customers who may have been directed to the machine by scammers. A representative of the business added that someone impersonating the bitcoin machine company called recently and tried to get the business itself to deposit “seed cash” into the machine, but the business didn’t fall for it.

“While cryptocurrencies can be used for legitimate purposes by law-abiding individuals, it is often used by criminals online for illicit purposes such as securities fraud, consumer and investment fraud, money laundering and extortion, to name a few,” said Aaron Van Hoff, FBI Springfield cyber supervisory special agent. “It is a desirable form of payment used by criminals for its expediency and anonymity to conduct domestic and global financial transactions. Because criminals frequently request payment in cryptocurrency, it is imperative that the public be educated on the indicators of scams and fraud to protect themselves, their communities and loved ones.”

A basic rule of thumb: Don’t believe anyone who calls you on the phone, regardless of who they claim to be, if they ask you to take your money and put it into a cryptocurrency machine.

The FBI also warns people about newer scams where victims are approached by people who offer work-from-home, online jobs that require deposits, sometimes in cryptocurrency, of the victim’s own money as part of the job. At first the victims appear to be making a salary or commission, but soon find that their money is gone.

According to Wikipedia, cryptocurrency is a digital currency designed to work as a medium of exchange through a computer network that does not rely on any central authority, such as a government or a bank, to uphold or maintain it. Bitcoin was started in 2009 and was the first cryptocurrency to be released, and since then nearly 40,000 bitcoin ATMs have been placed around the world.

According to each company’s website, CoinFlip has bitcoin ATMs placed in Springfield at three convenience stores, three vape shops and a liquor store; Bitcoin Depot has machines at numerous convenience stores, a wireless phone store, grocery stores and a liquor store; Byte Federal has a machine at an international foods store; and RokitCoin has a machine at a convenience store.

FBI crime statistics for 2023 show that the agency received 1,257 cryptocurrency fraud complaints last year in Illinois totaling $122,929,185 in losses. That’s up from 875 complaints and $56,212,989 in losses during 2022 and 900 complaints and $29,271,342 in losses during 2021. But those are just the crimes that are reported – the actual numbers are likely much higher.

In the last year-and-a-half, the Illinois Attorney General’s Office has received approximately 20 complaints related to bitcoin and cryptocurrency, four of which were related to consumers who reported a scam in which they were convinced to deposit money via a cryptocurrency ATM, according to spokesperson April McLaren.

Meanwhile, Fortin has some words of advice for business owners who choose to keep the bitcoin ATM machines in their local establishments.

“People that are hosting these machines on their property need to stay diligent and watch what is going on,” Fortin said. “If you see somebody standing by the machine talking on the phone, it’s probably a scam.” □

Publisher’s note

Sometimes Springfield is in the national spotlight for all the right reasons, such as when Sen. Barack Obama announced his campaign for the presidency on the lawn of the Old State Capitol. Lately we’ve been making national headlines for terrible reasons – first the death of Earl Moore in December 2022 at the hands of the EMTs who were called to assist him, and now the death of Sonya Massey at the hands of a sheriff’s deputy after she called 911. The murder charges filed in both cases are a good start, but Springfield has a long way to go to reconcile its troubled racial history. Acknowledging the systemic factors at play instead of blaming a bad apple here or there would help. Admitting the problem is always the first step.

Sonya Massey's father calls for Jack Campbell to resign

Sheriff's department denies knowledge of any prior complaints from Grayson's law-enforcement jobs

CRIME | Dean Olsen

It all happens in a few seconds – the interaction between a Sangamon County sheriff's deputy and Sonya Massey that leads to her being shot in the face in her home.

The 36 minutes of police-worn camera video showing the July 6 death of Massey inside her Woodside Township home in the “Cabbage Patch” neighborhood begins with calm and even light hearted conversation between Massey and two deputies.

But within seconds, after Massey, 36, takes a pot of hot water off her kitchen stove and puts the pot on a counter, the scene progresses to yelling by the deputies and ends with Grayson taking two steps toward Massey before firing three shots at the unarmed woman.

Grayson, 30, who would be charged two weeks later with first-degree murder, aggravated battery with a firearm and official misconduct in connection with Massey's death, says later on the video that he fired his 9mm gun after Grayson threw some of the hot water toward the deputies, though the flinging of water can't be seen on the video.

A Sangamon County judge ordered Grayson detained while he awaits trial. Grayson, a Riverton resident, is being held at the Menard County Jail in Petersburg, and the next hearing in his case is scheduled for Aug. 26. He has pleaded not guilty, and his attorney, Dan Fultz, has declined comment on the case.

Release of the video prompted widespread condemnation from local, state and national elected officials, pledges to seek justice for Massey and condolences to her family.

Statements included one from President Joe Biden, who called for Congress to pass the George Floyd Justice in Policing Act to crack down on police brutality. The Massey family also had an in-person meeting July 23 with Gov. JB Pritzker and Lt. Gov. Juliana Stratton at a local church.

Prominent civil rights lawyer Ben Crump, who is representing the Massey family, said at a Springfield news conference July 23 that he was informed the U.S. Department of Justice has opened an investigation into Massey's death.

Crump said he didn't know the scope of the investigation yet. The family appreciated the federal probe, he said, even though family members have been happy with Illinois State Police and State's Attorney John Milhiser's swift investigation of the case and charges against Grayson.

A DOJ spokesperson said in a statement:

James Wilburn, father of the late Sonya Massey, speaks at a July 22 news conference, saying he will fight for justice for his 36-year-old daughter, who sustained a fatal gunshot wound to the head July 6 in a police-involved shooting inside her Woodside Township home. Surrounded by friends and family members, Wilburn said, “You killed the wrong Black woman this time.” PHOTO BY DEAN OLSEN.

“The Department of Justice is aware of and assessing the circumstances surrounding the tragic officer-involved death of Ms. Sonya Massey and extends condolences to her family and loved ones. The department will continue to track the criminal case opened by the Sangamon County state's attorney.”

“Red flags”

Massey's father, James Wilburn and others have called for Sangamon County Sheriff Jack Campbell to resign for hiring Grayson while overlooking “red flags” that included Grayson's two prior DUI convictions and relatively short stints at five other Illinois police departments since 2021.

Campbell, an elected Republican officeholder, said through a spokesperson that he won't resign.

He said in a statement: “Sonya Massey lost her life due to an unjustifiable and reckless decision by former deputy Sean Grayson. Grayson had other options available that he should have used. His actions were inexcusable and do not reflect the values or training of our office.”

Misdemeanor DUI convictions don't automatically disqualify someone from being hired as a police officer in Illinois, according to former Springfield police chief Kenny Winslow, now executive director of the Illinois Association of Chiefs of Police.

State certification to work as a police officer is automatically revoked upon conviction of a felony or certain misdemeanors. The misdemeanors include aggravated assault, domestic practices and offering a bribe.

Grayson previously worked full-time for the Logan County Sheriff's Department and the Auburn Police Department and part-time for the Virden, Kincaid and Pawnee police departments.

Grayson, a 2013 graduate of North Mac High School and a colon-cancer survivor, was honorably discharged after serving three years in the U.S. Army, Fultz said.

Sangamon County spokesperson Jeff Wilhite said the county was aware of Grayson's DUI convictions when he was hired in May 2023. The Macoupin County misdemeanor convictions were in 2016 and 2017.

Grayson, whose annual pay was $56,234, had two years and nine months of combined full and part-time police experience before being hired, according to Wilhite.

“All employees undergo a background check,” Wilhite said. “To our knowledge, Grayson had not been fired from a prior law enforcement job. Grayson had no use-of-force complaints or citizens' complaints while employed as a Sangamon County deputy. And, to our knowledge, Grayson had no complaints filed against him at prior law enforcement jobs.”

Massey's father, James Wilburn, 66, of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, commended Springfield's mayor and chief of police, Sangamon County prosecutors and Illinois State Police investigators for their comments and involvement with the case. But Wilburn said, “The sheriff here is an embarrassment.”

After the release of police-worn camera footage on July 22, Crump said the video is “shocking.”

“He killed her so senselessly,” Crump said of Grayson. “It was senseless on every level.”

Massey's daughter, Jeanette “Summer” Massey, said her mother was previously diagnosed as having schizophrenia with paranoia.

But Crump said Grayson could have used the Taser he was carrying. He could have backed away or called a mental-health professional to the scene, Crump said.

“He could have done any number of things, but he engaged. He went closer to her,” Crump said.

Massey “was dealing with some issues,” Crump said. “She needed a helping hand. She didn't need a bullet to the face.”

A fatal encounter

The incident began because of a 911 call that Massey made about 12:50 a.m. July 6 when she suspected there was a prowler outside her home in the 2800 block of Hoover Avenue. After Grayson and another deputy arrive, Massey, a single mother of two teenagers who is alone in the house, answers the door and says, “Please God, please God, I'm trying to get help, y'all.”

She tells the deputies at her front door: “I love y'all. Thank you.” They search outside, fail to find any prowler and appear ready to leave when Grayson asks Massey for identification. She goes inside to get documentation, and the deputies follow her inside.

The key exchange on the video begins with Massey, a slight woman standing 5 feet 1 inches tall and weighing about 110 pounds, standing in a nightgown and pajamas behind a counter in her kitchen. Grayson, according to court records, stands 6 feet 3 inches tall and weighs about 230 pounds.

Malachi Hill Massey, the 17-year-old son of the late Sonya Massey, describes his mother at a July 23 news conference: "She was loving, caring and loved to cook. She was just a ball of energy." Malachi Massey is flanked at the event by civil rights lawyer Ben Crump (left) and Sonya Massey's 15-year-old daughter, Jeanette "Summer" Massey. PHOTO BY DEAN OLSEN.

"Where are you going?" Massey says in the direction of Grayson, who is white, and the other white deputy – who isn't named and hasn't been charged – while the pair stand in Massey's living room next to the open kitchen area.

Grayson doesn't appear to move but tells Massey that he wants to stay "away from your hot, steaming water."

"Away from my hot, steaming water?" Massey asks. Then she says something that appears to upset Grayson: "I rebuke you in the name of Jesus." She says the phrase again.

Grayson replies: "You better fucking not. I'll fucking shoot you in your fucking face."

Massey then says, "OK, I'm sorry." She appears to pick up the pot and duck behind the counter.

Grayson points his gun toward Massey and yells: "Drop the fucking pot! Drop the fucking pot!" As he is yelling, Grayson takes two steps toward Massey, moving part of the way around the end of the counter. He again yells, "Drop" before firing three shots at her. One of the bullets hits her in the face and she collapses.

It's unclear on the video whether Massey had taken her hands off the pot by the time Grayson fired the shots. When the other deputy says they should retrieve a medical kit to tend to Massey's wounds, Grayson says: "You can get it, but it's a head shot."

Grayson then says, "Goddamn it. I'm not going take fucking boiling water in the fucking head. Hey, look. It (the water) came right to our feet, too. Goddamn it."

Grayson then says, "There's nothing we could do, man."

The other deputy appears to put pressure on Massey's head to slow the bleeding until emergency medical service workers arrive. Grayson does not render medical aid and makes a comment about not wasting his med kit.

The video shows Grayson, who was fired the same day a Sangamon County grand jury handed down its indictment of him July 17, commenting to authorities as they arrive at the scene.

"She had boiling water and came at me with boiling water," Grayson says. "She said she was going to rebuke me in the name of Jesus."

When Grayson is outside the house, his own body-worn camera records him telling other police officers, "This fucking bitch is crazy" and "it fucking happened so goddamn quick. ... She set it up on purpose. ... I didn't have a fucking choice. ... We barely got missed."

Calls for justice

At the July 22 news conference, Teresa Haley, founder of nonprofit Visions 1908 and former president of the Springfield NAACP, said, "It is imperative that we do everything to make sure that this officer spends the rest of his life behind bars."

With the potential for additional prison time connected with the alleged use of a gun, Grayson could face a prison sentence of 45 years to life if convicted.

What the video depicted was "heinous," Crump said. "Where is the humanity? Where is the training? Until we get justice for Sonya Massey, we rebuke this discriminatory criminal justice system, in the name of Jesus."

Massey's father called for Congress to pass the George Floyd legislation as well as the John Lewis Voting Rights Act.

"I want justice for my baby," Wilburn said. "You killed the wrong Black woman this time." □

An investigation completed by the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services on June 28 concluded that neglect by David Yankee, left, led to the death of a foster child in his care.

We welcome letters. Please include your full name, address and telephone number. We edit all letters. Send them to editor@illinoistimes.com.

BRING CHARGES

This poor child never had a chance in the world, and now he's dead ("DCFS finds foster parent negligent in death of 7-year-old boy," July 3). And the state's attorney hasn't decided if criminal charges are going to be filed? The foster parents weren't home to supervise – what more is there to review? So this poor child died in vain, and no one may be held responsible? This just makes me sick.

Stephanie Campbell-Goebel

WAS LICENSE A MISTAKE?

Doesn't DCFS have to do home inspections on foster parents to make sure there are necessary safety precautions for pools at the house? I am asking because my friends were denied a foster care license because their pool was deemed unsafe. The mistake of somehow licensing someone near a non-secured pool is odd to me. The foster system itself is limping along by overworking their social workers. The turnaround of social workers is high. It is too stressful and not nearly enough pay. It wouldn't surprise me that it was a mistake they got licensed because someone was new at their job or placing those kids was some kind of emergency.

GREAT RESPONSIBILITY

I want to state that I found Catherine Wells' article on gun ownership – not gun control – extremely well-written and balanced, a great achievement when it comes to a topic as highly politicized as gun ownership ("Practice responsible gun ownership," July 3). As this has become so conflicted, voices of reason have gone silent a long time ago. We need to give thanks that Ms. Wells was able to step away from party politics and laid this out before us as the problem it really is. In the end it comes down to what we learn from Spider-Man: With great power comes great responsibility. And we need to give thanks that the constitution of the U.S. gave to its citizens the power to own guns. Now it is our obligation to handle this power with responsibility.

MY FATHER-IN-LAW FEEDS THE BIRDS 1953

After we kids left, my father-in-law wrote:

"Dear Kids, Do you know that it seems terribly lonely around here already? before Sun-Down last night every scrap of waffle and leftovers had disappeared. So, I put out some more scraps and this morning was a host to the usual sparrows, the occasional blue jays, the more rare starlings, and the even more rare cardinals. They were all out today in full force and have been around all day, off and on, hopefully. There is still some bread there mixed with fat that they have not been able to negotiate. I did put out quite a lot! I am of course missing you."

School absences impact communities

Chronic absenteeism contributes to low literacy, graduation rates

GUESTWORK | Melissa Hostetter

Over the last few years, a marked transformation has occurred in education. Long-standing research on how to best teach children to read was acknowledged. School districts around the country embraced the “science of reading” – an interdisciplinary body of knowledge about reading and writing. Thankfully, our local districts have begun to make this long-overdue change. Springfield District 186, for example, will roll out a new K-8 classroom literacy curriculum plus an evidence-based intervention curriculum. The future of literacy looks bright.

This future, however, may dim as local districts are weighed down by chronic absenteeism. According to the Illinois State Board of Education report card, in the 2022-23 school year, 43% of Springfield District 186 students missed 10 days or more of school. In our elementary schools, chronic absenteeism rates ranged from 25%-55%. Middle school rates varied between 25%-60% and in our high schools, 32%-60% of students were chronically absent.

Springfield District 186 is no different than any other Sangamon County school district – all have struggled with post-pandemic attendance. However, the effects of poor attendance are especially pronounced among low-income children, who need more time in the classroom to master reading and are less likely to have access to outside tutoring. Chronic absenteeism is four times more prevalent among low-income students, contributing to the high rates experienced in Springfield District 186.

There is more than meets the eye when it comes to chronic absenteeism. It is rarely based on kids not wanting to go to school. The reasons are varied. Some families face a constellation of issues: housing, transportation and health needs that keep them in crisis mode. A shortage of child care has turned some students into caregivers. Others struggle academically and find school to be unpleasant or even unbearable. Additionally, some students do not get enough sleep. Over the years, students have confided in me about staying up well into the night while playing video games, browsing their phones, attending to a crying sibling or waiting for a parent to return from work.

Absenteeism is a complicated issue with significant consequences. The statistics related to reading are particularly staggering. Only 17% of chronically absent students in kindergarten and first grade will be reading at grade level in third grade. By sixth grade, absenteeism is one of three signs that a student may drop out of high school. By ninth grade, attendance is a better predictor of graduation rates than eighth-grade test scores.

Educating parents about the consequences of absenteeism is paramount. Parents are hungry for guidance on how to help their children be successful in school.

The good news? School districts do not need to wait and see who will struggle. Prior-year data provides a good starting place.

Districts can be proactive and reach out to these families in the summer to determine barriers to attendance. The Regional Office of Education for Sangamon and Menard Counties currently partners with Springfield District 186 to reduce chronic truancy.

Project Impact established student advocates at Grant, Jefferson and Washington Middle School along with Feitshans and Harvard Park Elementary schools. The goal of Project Impact is to identify obstacles to school attendance and offer supportive services to help students and families overcome these barriers. Student advocates serve as liaisons between families and schools, providing home visits and accountability checks. Advocates and Regional Office truancy workers begin this process before the school year begins.

While this is an important start, a deeper, parent-focused approach is needed at all schools in Sangamon County and would reap even greater benefits. Working proactively with parents communicates two important points: We see your struggles and want to support you, but we also have high expectations for attendance.

The national initiative, Attendance Works, suggests the following: Universal prevention strategies for all students, early intervention strategies for at-risk students, and targeted intensive support for students with the highest need with punitive interventions being a last resort.

Some schools have campaigns solely focused on the first month of school. According to Attendance Works, half of the students who miss two to four school days in the first month will miss an entire month by the end of the school year.

We can also start preventative efforts in preschool. Laying the foundations early of good attendance has a strong return on investment. The University of Chicago Consortium of Chicago School Research found that low-income children who attend preschool regularly benefit more from the instruction than their high-income classmates, gaining 8% more literacy skills in kindergarten and 7% more in first grade. This narrows the reading gap by a third.

The results of absenteeism impact entire communities for generations. Children who struggle to read are less likely to graduate. Those same students are more likely to enter the criminal justice system and earn less over their lifespan. Improving attendance will pay off in spades. Prevention is always better than remediation. □

Much debate over data privacy bill

Far-right groups and ACLU both opposed it, for different reasons

POLITICS | Rich Miller

I'm not sure I've seen a stranger roll call than last week's House vote on Senate Bill 2978. The data privacy bill is an initiative of Illinois Secretary of State Alexi Giannoulias, and he was on the House floor during the debate.

The far-right ginned up social media opposition to the bill by claiming that it would allow non-citizens to vote. More than 1,400 electronic witness slips have so far been filed in opposition.

Groups like the Illinois Freedom Alliance and the Illinois Conservative Union claimed on Facebook that the bill will "interfere with verification of citizenship of voters." The Illinois Family Institute went even further in a recent email blast, claiming, "As it is written, this bill will likely be used to allow non-citizens to vote in our elections."

Accusations from the far-right that Democrats will use the votes of undocumented residents to "steal" the 2024 election have gained significant national traction over the past months. Usually, no evidence is presented, and you can chalk up this latest freak out to yet another misunderstanding of the basic lawmaking process.

The offending language is actually already in state statute, an official with the secretary of state's office explained during a House Executive Committee hearing last week. The bill drafters simply "recodified" it. A search of state statutes shows those claims to be accurate.

The official also said that the secretary of state voter registration system "does prevent anybody that is not provided citizenship information from being transmitted to register to vote."

But the loud, conspiracy-minded opposition stampeded Republican committee members away from the bill, and so it passed the committee on a partisan roll call.

The ACLU of Illinois is also strongly opposed to the bill, but for an entirely different reason.

The civil liberties group claims the measure "could be read as permitting data-sharing with federal or out-of-state law enforcement who are investigating or enforcing laws that criminalize abortion or gender-affirming care in other jurisdictions."

"We believe that the bill should be amended to be clear that our data should not be used to identify people seeking, providing, or assisting with reproductive or gender-affirming care – health care Illinois has made a policy decision to protect," The ACLU IL continued. "This could be accomplished by enacting protections similar to last year's automated license plate reader bill."

Secretary Giannoulias never convinced the group to drop its opposition.

Rep. Kelly Cassidy, D-Chicago, a legislative leader on abortion and trans rights, rose in debate to point out that, "Indiana law enforcement could ask the secretary to provide information related to an Illinois license plate on a car used in connection with an Indiana resident accessing abortion care in Illinois."

Cassidy also objected to the bill by noting that it does not have the same standard language inserted "several times" in other bills to make it "explicitly clear that the data would not be used to identify people seeking, providing or assisting with lawful health care." She also said she was "deeply concerned" that the data could be sold, "given that that's allowed as well."

In a shocking defeat, the entire Republican caucus and three House Democrats voted "No," while numerous other Democrats skipped the vote. The bill wound up with 57 votes, three shy of passage, as Secretary Giannoulias looked on. I don't think I've ever seen a legislative chamber reject a bill supported by a statewide officeholder while that official was standing among the members.

The sponsor, Rep. Margaret Croke, D-Chicago, put it on what's called Postponed Consideration, meaning she could bring the bill up for a vote again. Some House Democrats were legitimately absent, but this bill needs to be retooled. □

DOWNTOWN'S FESTIVAL DILEMMA

Concerns over costs and attendance lead to some event cancellations

Barry Friedman, owner of The Alamo, is a longtime organizer of the annual St. Patrick's Day parade downtown. After receiving a larger-than-usual bill for city services following the 2024 parade, he decided to cancel this year's Old Capitol Blues & BBQ festival, which he also organizes. DOWNTOWN | Scott Faingold

Downtown Springfield has been facing some difficult hurdles lately. In addition to the devastating fire which damaged several businesses on Adams Street in June, the Jaycees' annual Fourth of July Capital City Celebration, with its popular downtown fireworks display, didn't happen for the second year in a row (the derecho nixed it in 2023). AbeFest, a downtown festival held in July to highlight both local and national music acts, has also canceled for a second time. The Legacy of Giving Music Festival reported low turnout last month and may or may not be returning in the future. More recently, it was announced that the popular Old Capitol Blues & BBQ festival won't be providing Springfieldians with its usual combination of sweet grooves and tasty ribs next month.

Of course, things aren't all doom and gloom – the Levitt AMP concert series, first held on the downtown Y block in 2019, only seems to draw bigger crowds with each passing year and Downhome Music Fest is set for this weekend (see p.15). Still, a nervous, uneasy feeling seems to persist among event organizers for a variety of reasons, many of them financial.

Upon receiving the usual bill for security and other services from the city of Springfield following this year's St. Patrick's Day parade, longtime parade organizer Barry Friedman, who also owns the downtown bar The Alamo, was caught off guard.

"The costs for the police and stuff had gone up considerably, and it wasn't something we knew about," Friedman, who also served as this year's grand marshal, said. "It's usually been about the same cost every year, and this year it was a lot higher." The parade is held for charity and, in his role as grand marshal, Friedman had chosen Rutledge Youth Foundation as this year's recipient. "We're going to give them a check later this month but it is going to be significantly lower than it would have been because of the costs that we incurred," he said.

That unexpected extra financial burden also played a part in Friedman's decision to cancel this year's Old Capitol Blues & BBQ festival, which would have been celebrating its 20-year anniversary in 2024. Friedman acquired the rights to Blues & BBQ in 2016, after Downtown Springfield, Inc. announced the organization was no longer going to put on the event.

"Preparing for the festival, you budget for a certain amount – and considering what happened with the parade, we didn't have it in the budget," Friedman explained. "It's not all because of the city — all costs went up. But when you have to budget a year out, you can't afford to be surprised with anything, and that's what we were afraid of."

"The police department does get paid overtime for these events," said Springfield Mayor Misty Buscher when Illinois Times inquired about possible reasons for the additional costs. "When you see police officers surrounding the parade, they're all on overtime. It has always been the city's policy to bill (event organizers) for that overtime cost."

What was different this year was the number of police officers working, which contributed to the larger bills, according to city officials.

"In the last few years, we have been so short on manpower that we haven't been able to fill all the spots on those parade routes," said Sgt. Jeff Royer of the Springfield Police Department. "With fewer officers working, you're going to see lower costs in those years." Royer credits the current city administration and SPD Chief of Police Ken Scarlette for providing more available officers this year, which in turn resulted in more overtime being charged to organizers.

In an interview with IT, Buscher acknowledged that for future charity events such as the St. Patrick's Day parade, she would be willing to consider negotiating ahead of the time for a lower number of officers on duty so as to not impact the eventual charity recipients as much. "We'd still have to decide what is sufficient for public safety. Because all the parade-goers do anticipate it to be safe when they attend," she said.

Tim Smith helped DSI put on the Amaranth Apple Festival downtown in 2017 and 2018 but low attendance and weather issues caused that festival to bite the dust. Still, Smith caught the festival bug and created AbeFest, which he organized for a few years, with one summer off for COVID. AbeFest did not happen in 2023 and was also canceled this summer.

"We were not an established festival with a good crowd base," Smith said. "I was stuck at 500-800 people per night but I was booking bands that needed more than that. I've heard a lot of other promoters say 'Springfield likes free tickets and cheap beer' — and that doesn't pay for this stuff."

Another issue for AbeFest did involve fees from the city. "I don't agree with the city charging these festivals that are trying to promote people coming downtown — but I don't believe it's making or breaking any festivals — it's more like salt in the wound," Smith said.

Smith estimated that half the charges AbeFest incurred from the city were to pay for off-duty police. "I didn't ask for that — the city is deciding on its own to charge you for something you didn't ask for," he said. "I had my own security. If the city wanted a stronger police presence, they should just do that as support, not charge for it."

In a prepared statement regarding the Top, Mayor Misty Buscher said there were more police officers working this year's St. Patrick's Day parade, which resulted in increased overtime costs, compared to manpower shortages the last few years which limited the number of officers available to work the event. PHOTO organization's reasons for canceling the Capital City Celebration earlier this month, the Springfield Jaycees cited financial hardships, including difficulty obtaining sponsors along with an exceedingly short window in which crowds actually gathered to buy food and enjoy music and fireworks.

"One or two hours at full sales capacity doesn't even begin to create funding to continue a full weekend festival," according to the statement, which also claimed that the Jaycees "asked multiple times for the city to help us by either pointing us toward businesses that they knew had remaining donation funds or to simply cover the cost of the fireworks while we continued to put on the festival.

Unfortunately, we did not receive a response in time to safely put on this year's festivals."

Buscher acknowledged that while the city has provided funding for the downtown Fourth of July celebration in the past, that was not the case this year. According to Buscher, the city of Springfield gave the Jaycees a check for $40,000 two years ago to help them restart their fireworks program, but it was not intended to be an ongoing commitment.

"Apparently that money was spent in 2022, and then in 2023 they canceled because of the derecho and then had no money (for this year)," she said. "We just didn't have money budgeted to fund that for them again. And I don't think they were offering to pay for police protection for the citizens that would come to the fireworks. I would recommend if the Jaycees want to have a Fourth of July fireworks display downtown, they need to have a business plan in effect for how they're going to raise the money and pay for things."

Both the Jaycees' statement and the mayor's office made a point of acknowledging that even without the Capital City Celebration, there were plenty of other options for Springfield citizens to see fireworks this Independence Day weekend. In addition, a city-financed fireworks display is set for the last concert in this year's Levitt AMP series featuring Radio Free Honduras and Jose Gobbo Trio. "We've done that a couple years in a row," said Buscher. "Every year [Levitt AMP] gets bigger and bigger, it feels like."

"The ongoing Levitt AMP concert series has achieved its primary goal of uniting the community through music in our vibrant downtown," wrote Downtown Springfield Inc. executive director Carlos Ortega in an email. "While it has successfully brought together over 1,000 attendees at times, it has not significantly altered commercial patterns, according to feedback from local small businesses. People attending these free concerts are primarily focused on enjoying the music, rather than engaging in commercial activities."

He noted that the high attendance numbers seem to address one of the most frequently repeated complaints about downtown. "The series has highlighted that downtown parking is adequate."

Buscher said she would be glad to offer help to any organizers wanting to put together events downtown in the future. "I told the Old Capitol Art Fair folks we would invite them in to have a meeting to pre-plan for their event and they were like, 'Oh my God, we would love that, we didn't know that was an option!'" she said.

"I think some of the organizers that have been doing it for so long, (the idea of a meeting like that) kind of falls to the side because it's mostly lined up from previous times," said Crystal Trent, operations manager for Springfield Public Works. "But things change over the years."

"I believe that the current administration is supportive of downtown events, despite the recent cancellations and challenges," wrote Ortega. "The increasing costs associated with insurance, trash removal and utility hookups can indeed be prohibitive for event organizers. However, the administration remains open to listening and working with event organizers to address these issues."

As for feelings about the state of things in downtown Springfield overall, there seems to be a variety of opinions. "This is my 30th year at the Alamo," said Barry Friedman. "There are people trying hard, but this is as slow and as bad as I've seen. Foot traffic – there's none."

"Downtown Springfield remains quite walkable from our center at the Old State Capitol," wrote Ortega. "I believe a softer approach to downtown development would be supportive. As an example: currently, traffic on Fifth and Sixth streets, as well as Washington and Jefferson streets, moves quickly because they are state highways, creating a perception of difficulty in navigating the area. The density of stores is also an issue, with streets like Monroe, Fifth, Sixth, Adams and Washington feeling sparsely populated and challenging to navigate."

"I understand why people might have kind of a knee-jerk, negative reaction to how things have been going downtown," said Jay Wheeler, organizer of Downhome Music Fest, who is also a manager at the downtown bar Celtic Mist. "But I think for these kind of events, it's worth taking the gamble to get people down here and remind them what a fun area downtown Springfield is."

Scott Faingold is a journalist, educator and musician. He has been director of student media at University of Illinois Springfield, founding editor of Activator magazine, a staff reporter for Illinois Times and co-host of Old School Bleep, a music-centered podcast.

This weekend will mark the 14th year for the Downhome Music Festival. Downhome founder Josh Catalano moved to South Carolina earlier this year but was still responsible for booking this year's music. He will also be on hand to perform with his band Wayward Hotel on Saturday.

"Financially, it's getting trickier every year," said Josh Wheeler, who is responsible for behind-the-scenes logistics for Downhome. "I understand Barry [Friedman] backing out of Blues & BBQ – the overall investment into an event of any real scope is pretty heavy, and sponsorship has been harder to get."

Wheeler said that he's found the city to be reasonable and accommodating to work with. "The cost of everything goes up, especially when you're dealing with police and security and stuff like that. But it doesn't look like the price for public works or the actual police security has really gone up at all. It's mostly the cost of everything else – everything just costs more and it's really hard not to pass that cost directly on to your patrons."

More than most local festivals, a large part of Downhome's mission has always been to act as a source of support and exposure for local bands that play largely original music, which is not always the most reliable road to commercial success.

"I think one of the best aspects of Downhome is that we give the bands the opportunity to sell their own tickets – that's money directly into their pockets. And then the gate (money from admissions) pretty much all goes to the bands themselves," Wheeler said.

A key to many Asian recipes

Lemon grass adds refreshing quality to wide range of dishes

FOOD | Ashley Meyer

Lemon grass is a cornerstone ingredient in many southeast Asian recipes. This culinary grass lends a refreshing, verdant quality to a range of dishes and is readily available in Asian grocery stores. A perennial in tropical climates, lemon grass also can be grown as an annual here in Illinois and can overwinter well indoors in a container when placed in a sunny windowsill. It's a particularly fast-growing plant and can quickly grow over 3 feet tall when planted in the ground.

When ready to harvest, twist or cut the stems off at ground level. Ideally, stems would be about ½-inch thick, but thinner stems from younger plants can be used also. Many recipes call for simmering a whole stem, lightly crushed, and then removing it much like you would a cinnamon stick. To use minced lemon grass in a recipe, peel back the tough outer layers to reveal the more tender core before mincing it very finely with a sharp knife. Most recipes use the base of the lemon grass stem, but the green top can be simmered in water to make a rejuvenating tea or used to make lemon grass infused simple syrup, perfect for mixing with seltzer and lime or in a wide array of cocktails from gimlets to Tom Collins to a Vietnamese-inspired French 75.

Grilled lemon grass beef

This recipe for grilled lemon grass beef skewers was adapted from Andrea Nguyen's stunning cookbook, Into the Vietnamese Kitchen: Treasured Foodways, Modern Flavors. Nguyen, one of my favorite authors, fled Vietnam with her family during the fall of Saigon in 1975 and eventually settled in southern California. A James Beard award winner and author of several books, Nguyen has a special talent for adapting the recipes of her birthplace for American cooks without dumbing them down.

This lemon grass marinade recipe is traditionally combined with thinly sliced beef but over the years I've taken to using it with just about everything from chicken to shrimp to vegetables. Perfect as a light appetizer or as a building block for countless dishes, the sweet-salty grilled meat is delicious when rolled up into a fresh spring roll or piled on top of a bowl of cool rice noodles and thinly sliced vegetables and served with a squeeze of lime and a drizzle of punchy lime-driven dressing.

¼ cup chopped shallot or red onion
1 teaspoon brown sugar
¼ teaspoon ground black pepper

1 heaping teaspoon shrimp paste (optional, can be found at Asian markets)
1 tablespoon fish sauce
2 tablespoons canola oil
¼ cup finely minced lemon grass
2 tablespoon toasted sesame seeds
1 pound thinly sliced steak or protein of your choice (chicken wings or sliced thighs, pork loin, tofu or even sliced vegetables such as zucchini or eggplant are delicious options)

Dipping sauce to serve (recipe below), or hoisin sauce

Combine the shallot, brown sugar, pepper, shrimp paste, fish sauce, canola oil and lemon grass in a blender and puree. Add the toasted sesame seeds and mix to combine. Pour the marinade over your chosen protein and mix well to ensure everything is evenly coated with the marinade. Cover and let marinate at room temperature for one hour. Alternatively, the marinated meat can be refrigerated for up to 24 hours. Remove it from the refrigerator 30 minutes prior to cooking.

When ready to cook, skewer the meat if desired onto bamboo skewers that have been soaked in water for about 30 minutes to prevent them from burning. Heat a grill to medium. You should only be able to hold your hand about 4 inches away from the grill grate for 5 seconds. They can also be broiled in the oven on an aluminum foil lined baking sheet. Grill or broil for about three minutes on each side for skewers. Chicken wings will take closer to 25 minutes, turning them frequently so they cook evenly, until they reach an internal temperature of 165 degrees.

Serve with a sprinkle of sesame seeds and sauce on the side for dipping.

Dipping sauce

¼ cup brown sugar
¼ cup each rice wine vinegar and lime juice
¼ cup fish sauce
3 garlic cloves, minced
1 teaspoon minced ginger
1 red hot chili, such as bird chili, minced, or ¼ teaspoon red pepper flakes (to taste)
½ cup water, to taste
Combine the above ingredients in a jar and mix well. Let sit for at least 15 minutes for flavors to meld.

Lemon grass simple syrup

½ cup granulated sugar
¼ cup light corn syrup
¼ cup water
2 stalks lemon grass, roughly chopped (green parts are ok)

Combine all the above ingredients in a saucepan and bring to a simmer. Simmer for 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove from the heat and allow to cool. Strain the syrup through a fine meshed sieve into a jar. Add a stalk of lemon grass to the jar if desired before covering and storing in the refrigerator.

Lemon grass, melon and lime sorbet

¾ cup lemon grass simple syrup
One medium melon such as honeydew or cantaloupe (about 2 ½ pounds)
Zest and juice of one lime

Remove the melon rind, scoop out the seeds and cut it into rough chunks. Puree the cut melon in a blender to yield about 3 cups (add leftovers to smoothies or a glass of sparkling wine or seltzer for a summery brunch cocktail). Add the lime zest, juice and simple syrup, then transfer the mixture to an ice cream maker and freeze according to the manufacturer's instructions. Alternatively, you can freeze the sorbet in a round metal cake pan, removing it from the freezer every 15 minutes to stir it, making sure to thoroughly scrape the sides each time. Once frozen, pack the sorbet into a freezer safe container and press a sheet of plastic wrap over the top before returning to the freezer to firm up before serving, about four hours. □

Teen queens reign supreme in all-city musical, SIX

THEATER | Courtney Wick

Most of us know the rhyme about the unfortunate fates of Henry VIII's six wives: "Divorced, beheaded, died. Divorced, beheaded, survived." After seeing the all-city teen production of the musical SIX, codirected by Morgan Kaplan and Andrew Maynerich, you can add "revived" to the end of that poem.

SIX reimagines Henry's wives as a glam-pop, ballad-belted girl group. It's a short and lively rock concert (with an 80-minute run time) combining royal history with vocal stylings reminiscent of Ariana Grande, Adele, Beyonce and more. Each wife channels a different modern pop act as she sings to make the case that her trauma under Henry's reign was the worst to endure. It is part history lesson, part singing competition and all fun.

Codirector Kaplan said she was "inspired to bring back the all-city high school musicals because I wanted a fun, new summer project." Previously, auditions were open to only District 186 students, but this production accepted auditions from any high school student in the surrounding community. "We weren't sure what the interest level would be, but we had girls come out from all over. There are five different high schools represented in our cast," said Kaplan.

The auditions brought out more than 40 teens from nearly every school in the area. Springfield High School student Claire Wright, who breathtakingly plays the role of Catherine Parr, reminisced about the audition process.

"I went into it thinking I'm not gonna get it," she said. "It was nerve-wracking because there were 18 of us called back for only six parts, and I had three audition cuts to sing a crazy riff.

Livia Nieves, bottom left (black and gold); Libby Kulek (black and silver); Kayla Simon (green); Kaydence Daley (red and black); Grace Klenke (pink) and Claire Wright (blue) play the six wives of Henry VIII in SIX – Teen Edition. PHOTO BY KIM GUNTER

Even with such hard decisions to make, the rest of the cast fell into place: Catherine of Aragon is portrayed by Livia Nieves of Rochester High School, Anne Bolyn by Kayla Simon from Glenwood High School, Anne of Cleaves by Kaydence Daley from Riverton High School, Grace Klenke as Katherine Howard and Libby Kulek as Jane Seymour, both from SHG.

Regardless of alma maters, the cast bonded immediately. "It's been an entirely new experience to hang with these really talented people. They've inspired me to push myself when I'm onstage," said

Nieves.

Codirector Maynerich was also impressed with how hard this cast worked. "This group came in almost professional. We often could have left rehearsals early, but they'd ask to stay," she said.

Backstage, the SIX girls laugh, talk loudly and finish each other's sentences. Their dressing room is filled with spilled glitter and a large, communal candy bowl that's continually passed around while they affectionately mock one other. It's as if you've walked into a movie-set slumber party. "We're all besties now; we always hang out with each other. We created a very special bond, for sure," said Daley.

Their girl-power-bond and bold personalities offstage radiate onstage through their characters. Kulek discussed her role as Jane Seymour. "I've never given birth or died, so she's kind of hard to relate to, but her song is about remaining strong, so I sing it from that perspective," she said.

Some of the girls found their characters more easily recognizable, "I'm very energetic, and so is Anne Bolyn. I am her and she is me," said Simon. Katherine Howard was nearly the same age as Klenke. "She was beheaded at 19, and I'm 18, so I really just channel myself for this role. We're both sassy, fun and kind of flirty," Howard said.

From the moment the queens take the stage, you can't help but smile. The performances are nothing short of spectacular with powerhouse vocals and dynamic choreography (also provided by Maynerich and Kaplan). Each girl gets a moment in the spotlight, but the most thrilling points are when they move in harmony to showcase each other's stories.

With a set made of stairs, the rock band and colorful chaser lights, SIX is simple staging done right. The costumes and jewelry, created by SHG teacher Grace Fahey, are an impeccable combination of pop princess and 16th century Tudor court. Never has a teen show looked so regal.

This production is a triumphant testament to the power of sisterhood and the talent of Springfield's young people. SIX entertains as well as inspires; proving that age is no barrier to delivering a high-quality, impressive performance. Brava to the staff and to each of these six teenagers – the future of theater is indeed bright in their hands. □

SIX – Teen Edition, sponsored by Henson Robinson Co. and produced by Damien Kaplan, continues its run at SHG Dominican Hall Theater, July 26-28. Performances start at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday. Tickets are available by calling 217-494-4390 or visiting <https://shg.ticketleap.com/six-the-musical>.

MUSIC

Downhome time and more

NOW PLAYING | Tom Irwin

As our summer season rolls into the last weekend of July, there are gaggles of regular gigs in outdoor venues and indoor establishments around the area and gignets galore in many a winery, brewery, restaurant and bar. It's up to you to get out there and enjoy the fun before it's done.

The last weekend in July means its Downhome time as the popular festival showcasing local, original music bands once again sets up with two outdoor stages, plus an indoor live music area (mostly acoustic-based) inside the recently remodeled Brewhaus Pub. With the two-stage concept, one each on Adams and Washington streets with Seventh Street as the connecting avenue, you can concentrate on a single band at a time. The crowd just moves down the street as one group ends and the other begins. The good news here is that the craft beer vendors are strategically located in the middle so on your way back and forth between the stages you can fulfill your libation needs by filling your cup while heading to the next band.

Also remember that the money you pay to get in (after deducting the costs of presenting the festival) is evenly distributed between all the bands thereby creating the situation of a much-too-rare occurrence where original music actually pays off. There's also an area for bands to sell merchandise, and that's very cool and supportive, too. The more possibilities there are for original music to be performed, the more it gives artists a good reason to make more of it, something I highly encourage, approve, desire and cheer on at every opportunity. The Downhome Music Fest features more than 25 acts, runs from 5 p.m. to midnight this Friday and 2:45 p.m. to midnight this Saturday (see p.15 for the full schedule). Tickets are available from performing band members in advance and always at the gates.

Meantime, Thursdays keep kicking down the door with a variety of music all over the place. Let's keep leading with the Levitt AMP concert series since we have only one more week to go after headliners Cactus Blossoms and Chicago-based openers Dogs at Large cover the goods this week (with the Copper Coin Ballet Company doing the dance intermission), at that downtown space north of the Governor's Mansion.

Also on Thursday, catch Dave Littrell at Curate, Not Petty on the Lincoln Stage

at the Illinois Products Market on the state fairgrounds, Jason McKenzie at Casey's Pub on the patio, Hipbone and the Joints at the Curve Inn and the Silver Creek Bluegrass Band on the square at Douglas Park in Winchester.

Friday runs the gamut of genres clothed in similar circumstances, such as acoustic duo Niko & Elijah at VFW Post 755 and cover rock band Branded at Weebles, acoustic duo The Tangents at El Taco Guapo, cover rock band Jameson Freeway at Longbridge Golf Course, plus the diverse sounds of the Samba Llamas at Boone's, Mattison Avenue at Harvest Market and Illinois Symphony Orchestra Flute and Marimba Duo at Danenberger Family Vineyards.

Saturday gives us a pump and a jump with Joel Honey, After School Special and Brandy Kristin Band at Coz's Pizza Parking Lot Party, The Cocktails at Goodfellas and James Herr at the Railyard.

Sunday sees another wide array of live music, especially in the small towns around the capital city, including Wolf Crick Boys at Mama Lee's Sandbar near Mechanicsburg, Al Kitchen at Trail's End in Curran, Antone & Wick at Hill Prairie Winery near Oakford and John Drake at Slaughterhouse Brewing in Auburn.

Yes, there's plenty more where that comes from, all listed in our music listings. □

it Abraham Lincoln once remarked, "I think nothing equals Macbeth." The nation's future 16th president cherished Shakespeare's play. So it seems fitting that it be brought to the stage at Theatre in the Park in the village where Lincoln once lived as a young man. The story of Macbeth is familiar. Three witches tell the Scottish general Macbeth that he will be king of Scotland. Encouraged by his ambitious wife, Macbeth kills the king (Duncan), becomes the new king and kills more people out of paranoia. The production, directed by Mark Buckholz, stars Kenny McNaughton as Macbeth and Maggie Teaman as Lady Macbeth. However, this show is not your ordinary production of Macbeth. Buckholz said it is "designed with a steampunk vibe for the outdoor stage. The costumes, accessorized with gizmos, gadgets and goggles, harken back to the London of Jack the Ripper. The broadsword combat in frock coats is reminiscent of the Creole duels of old New Orleans." The show maintains a Scottish flavor, Buckholz said. It includes bagpipe music by Tommy Ogilvy and the Celtic Dancers. The show is rated PG. Tickets are $18.
